CHILDREN'S NOVEL

—Me enfadé tanto que eché a todo el mundo del Jardín. A los animales, a las hadas, incluso a las abejas. Solo hacía que gruñir y espantar a todo aquel que quería entrar en este jardín.

Dejé de ser un perro y me convertí en un monstruo. Y el Jardín quedó abandonado y como lo ves ahora, dormido en un sueño del que no quiere despertar.

La primavera no llega nunca al Jardín, pequeña hada. Ahora vete—

AUTHOR: Juan Bolinches

ILLUSTRATOR: Noelia De Alda

SYNOPSIS: For the Giner family, their war was not one in which kings and emperors fought from comfortable armchairs. For them, wars were not fights between the Church and politicians to maintain their positions and accumulate wealth and power; and this one in particular should not be either, the sentence they faced every day was to avoid bad luck and the misfortunes that harass the most unfortunate as the only players in a roulette wheel of luck or life. No, their only war was to survive day by day, praying to that God who had to take care of them, so that their hands would have enough strength to continue working and, only when night came and the family gathered, could they declare out loud that That day they had won their particular battle. This is a story of humble people for whom small details are big stones in their respective paths. In the past, today and in any possible future, this fictional story can even happen in real life.
